INTRODUCTION.

MANY articles in the first edition of this work not being clear enough to prevent different constructions being put on them both by journeymen and their employers, as their different interests might suggest, which has been the cause of frequent, and, in some cases, almost irreconcilable disputes betwixt them; in order, therefore, to prevent, as much as possible, the like evil occurring in future, it is requested that both parties will be particular in making themselves acquainted with the following

GENERAL EXPLANATION:

- ALL kinds of drawer work in single carcasses, or any work to represent the same, to measure on the carcass; and all work with double carcasses to measure the bottom one, both for length and width. A bookcase, when made to stand on a secretary, to measure only its own length; libraries, on the bottom part.

Shamming of drawer fronts, the price of which is given in a table, is settled exclusive of putting on brass work; nor is the nuts or lock plates.

plates to be let into any work in the start except the fronts of secretary or furniture drawers, the fall of a bureau, ladies' or gentlemen's dressing tables, or writing fire screens; all drawers in chamber, card, or work tables, and the tablet drawer in pier and sideboard tables, or those on the inside of doors, in all work whatever, to start without locks; and when a secretary drawer is introduced into any piece of work, deduct the price of the drawers took out for its reception, then add the price of the secretary drawer.

Tables, of all denominations and descriptions whatever, to be measured on the tops for both length and width, and to start, except otherwise mentioned in the preamble, with plain Marlbro' legs, and without castors; those on pillar and claws without plates on the bottoms.

As the Tables of plinthing, therming, pannelling, or putting corner strings in different sorts of legs and claws, veneering, planting on, and working astragals of different descriptions, cross-banding, &c., except in some particular cases, and there the price is given, were made to prevent a repetition of inserting the prices they contain in the different pieces of work they were likely to occur in, and likewise to prevent, as much as possible, in those cases, all references, except a general one; it is, therefore, requested, when the price of any article of the above description is wanting, the workman will be careful in examining the table, as all the prices of the different articles that could be thought of are inserted in them.
